

Though price shocks are most common, many of them don't have as severe an effect as other shocks (esp. health).

Data is for both 2012 and 2014; households are allowed to report one shock each of price, hazard, and health (with the most severe ranking within price shocks recorded).

